Fit City Duluth picked for CDC forum

The nonprofit Fit City Duluth, which seeks to promote active and healthy lifestyles in the city, has been named one of 25 organizations in the country to attend a conference on preventing obesity organized by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Mimi Stender, Fit City Duluth's director, said her group was selected out of hundreds of applications for the Community Approaches to Obesity Prevention Conference from July 10-11 in Atlanta.

The conference will provide Fit City Duluth members with information on community approaches to obesity control, Stender said, as well as a list of measures of success and barriers that prevent success.
